MEMORANDUM: To be issued by ID/P, ID/I and ID/S to their respective overseas personnel

SUBJECT : Security

This letter is prompted by a recent serious security breach at an overseas station. One of our senior officers checked out of a hotel and left his luggage and a brief case containing classified cables, dispatches, and other documents concerning a covert project in the custody of a hotel employee. When the officer returned two hours later, he found his luggage but the brief case was missing. Obviously, the classified papers should not have been in the brief case in the first place, but for the officer to allow the brief case out of his possession at all under the circumstances was an error in judgment which it is feared will have far-reaching effects as far as this particular project is concerned. Any time any KIBAK personnel act in motion such ^{as} chain of events ^{as} which may be reasonably calculated to result in a security breach, it reflects a serious lack of judgment on their part.

Although it is recognized that as professional intelligence officers you are thoroughly conversant with sound security practices, it is felt necessary to reiterate strongly the necessity for constant vigilance in the physical handling of classified material, particularly when it is moved outside of the normal office area.

Therefore, please review the security practices presently in force at your station and have another thorough look at whether or not all personnel under your jurisdiction are following the regulations and sound procedures thoughtfully and conscientiously. Do not fail to go over all relevant precautions even though many may appear too elementary to warrant repetition.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Chiefs of Stations and Bases

SUBJECT: Security

[1. I have noted with increasing concern certain laxness in observing basic principles of security in the handling of classified documents] ^{2.} Although I recognize that as professional intelligence officers you are thoroughly conversant with sound security practices, I feel that I must raise again the necessity for constant vigilance in the physical handling of classified material, particularly when it is moved outside of the normal office area.

1. [2.] This letter ^{is} [was] prompted by my learning of a recent security breach at an overseas station. One of our senior officers checked out of a hotel and left his luggage and brief case containing classified cables, dispatches, and other documents concerning a [major] covert project in the custody of a hotel employee. When the officer returned two hours later, he found his luggage but the brief case was missing. Obviously, the classified papers should not have been in the brief case in the first place, but for the officer to allow the brief case out of his possession at all under the circumstances was an error in judgment which we fear may have far-reaching effects as far as this particular project is concerned. ^{Obviously too, this officer should have been more experienced}

^{letter than to set in motion such a chain of events} 3. Please review the security practices presently in force at your

Station and have another look at whether or not all personnel under your jurisdiction are following the regulations thoughtfully and conscientiously. ^{No}

^{not fail to go over all relevant precautions even though many may appear too elementary to warrant repetition.}
